Singapore ship manager Quenvale Marine Pte. Ltd. has named Daven Korsloe as managing director, completing a leadership change that began last year.

Korsloe, 44, a Singapore national, joined Quenvale Marine in 2019 as head of chartering and has run the company's dry-bulk chartering desk since then. Before that, Korsloe spent more than a decade in commercial roles at regional shipping companies.

The appointment follows the departure of several senior executives in 2024, including finance director Pyeon Seo-an, who stepped down after six years with the company. A new finance director is expected to be announced in the coming months.

Quenvale Marine was incorporated in Singapore in 2018 and manages a fleet of dry-bulk carriers that move coal, grain and iron ore across Asia. The board said the new managing director would focus on renewing the fleet and on expanding long-term charter contracts with commodity traders.

"Daven knows our customers and our ships better than anyone, and the board has full confidence in the new leadership team," the board said in a statement.

Korsloe said the company would keep its focus on safe operations. "Our priority is reliable service for charterers and a modern, efficient fleet," Korsloe said.
